Developing and Evaluating Pharmacokinetics-Driven Dynamic Personalized Medicine: A Framework and Case Study

A. Demetri Pananos, M.Math[1, *], Rommel G. Tirona Ph.D[2], Simon Bonner Ph.D[3], and Daniel J, Lizotte, Ph.D[1,4]

[1]Department of Epidemiology and Biostatsitics, Western University
[2]Department of Physiology and Pharmacology, Western University
[3]Department of Statistics and Actuarial Sciences, Western University
[4]Department of Computer Science, Western University
[*]Corresponding Author

Corresponding author contact: apananos@uwo.ca

Social Media Content: Additional control in when and how many measurements are made can lead to better outcomes in personalized medicine. However, additional control comes at a cost. We present a framework for assessing if the juice is worth the squeeze using Bayesian pharmacokientic models and dynamic treatment regimes in our latest paper!

Authors' twitter name: @PhDemetri @danlizotte

Preffered hashtags and organizational tags: #Statstwitter #Bayesstats #WesternUniversity

Word count: 4496 [1]